Graduate Women’s Project
Past, Current and Future Programming
Ina Marie Kelleher

Doctoral Student in Ethnic Studies; Designated Emphasis in Gender, Women and Sexuality Studies; GWP director and member of GA for two years.
What is GWP?

- The Graduate Women's Project (GWP) is the only program at UC-Berkeley devoted solely to addressing the concerns of graduate women. GWP serves to connect graduate women to the support systems available on campus. While the project primarily works on women’s issues and interests, it also seeks to address the intersecting concerns for women including: racial and ethnic justice, student parent concerns, disability and access issues, as well as LGBTQ rights. Some of its activities include information and referral services, workshops, receptions and mixers, distinguished woman lectures series, and seminars.

Restorative Justice for Addressing Sexual/Gender Discrimination

Restorative and transformative justice have become new tools in addressing harm and violence in communities. As women, we are often the targets of physical, emotional, and sexual violence. Come learn how these tools can be used to address large gender-based harms, as well as the everyday impacts of sexism. Also, learn the basics of holding a women's healing circle in your own community.

WHEN: October 21, 2014
TIME: 12:00 PM - 1:00 PM
LOCATION: 251 L, Calvin Building, Room 618

Lunch provided and graduate student ID required

Sponsored by the Graduate Assembly of the University of California, Berkeley

Using Restorative Justice for Addressing Gender-Based Harms

Catherine "Kid" Miller is a native of Oregon and has lived in the Bay Area for 2 years. She has worked in the restorative justice field for 21 years, with a special focus on those impacted by community violence. She holds two Master's Degrees from Loyola University - Chicago in Social Work and Social Justice. She currently works as a Restorative Practices Coordinator at Catholic Charities of the San Francisco Bay Area, providing restorative and healing circles for incarcerated individuals in the correctional setting. She is also the co-founder of the Bay Area Women's Healing Group and a frequent speaker on the topics of gender-based violence and restorative justice.
Future Directions
